STUART ANGILL

Not long before Press Day for this issue of the NEWS we heard the tragic news that our Production Manager, Stuart Angill, had been killed in a serious road accident close to his home in France. Apparently he was desperately trying to avoid an approaching jack-knifing lorry. His wife Rosemary was hurt, but is now back home recovering from a fractured sternum.

Stuart's job as Production Manager was to take the basic MS Word files from the Editors and transform them into the format and page layouts seen by readers of the NEWS. This task including inserting the photographs, tables (which he hated), and adding the headers and footers in a consistent manner. Miraculously Stuart nearly always managed to fit the articles neatly into complete pages without having to leave odd spaces, resulting in a very professional looking publication. He also had to contend patiently with minor changes requested by the Editors at the very last minute.

Stuart of course had to liaise continuously with our printers, Fericon of Reading, and they have very helpfully taken on Stuart's tasks for a few issues, starting with this one.

Stuart was as can be seen a very valuable member of the IRSE NEWS team and will be sorely missed.
